Ze studie více než 10 000 studentů v systému University of Wisconsin:

Note. non-cis = non-cisgender; non-hetero = non-heterosexual; sci = sciences; lib = liberal; con = conservative.

Studentky jsou téměř dvakrát častěji přesvědčeny, že by měly nahlásit instruktora, který řekl něco, co někteří studenti považují za škodlivé.

Přítel poukazuje na to, že cenzura probuzení není jako v roce 1984, kdy se Velký bratr neustále dívá. Místo toho žijeme pod tyraníí Malé sestry, která vás neustále sleduje, a pokud řeknete něco, co zraňuje její city, řekne to mámě a pak budeš mít potíže!

Zde je celá zpráva:

Názory studentů systému UW na svobodu projevu

Shrnutí odpovědí na průzkum

1. února 2023

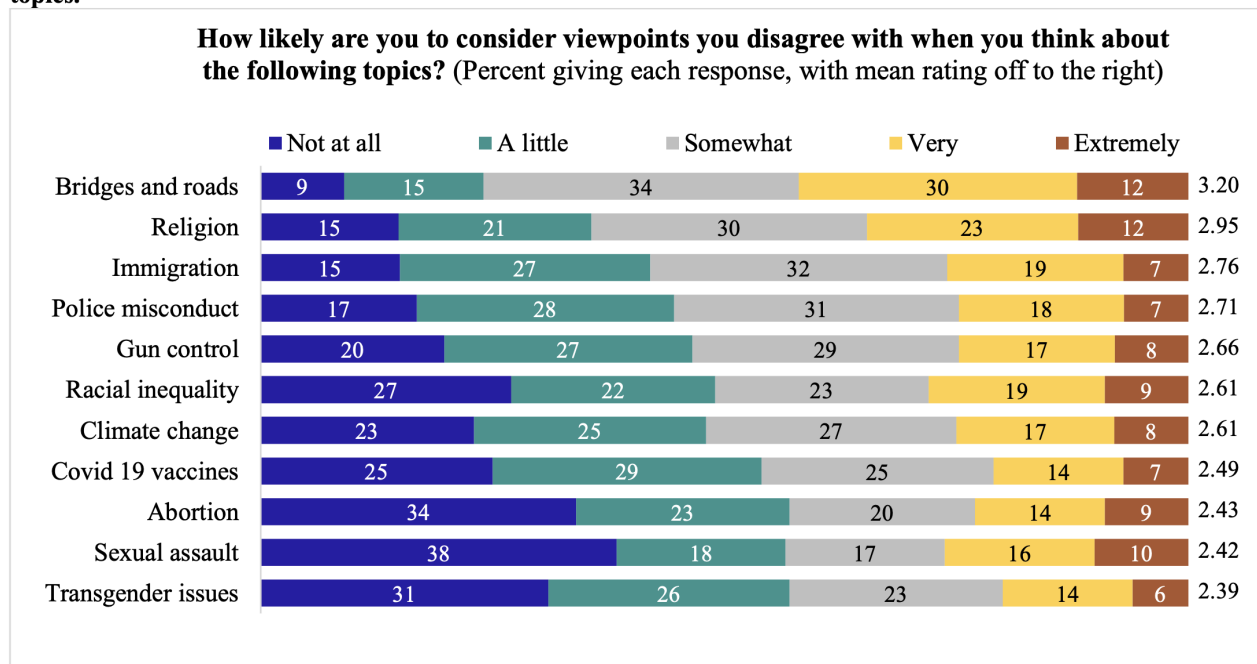

System University of Wisconsin se skládá ze své slavné vlajkové lodi UW-Madison a 12 méně prestižních kampusů typu Directional State.

Ženy častěji než muži...

- identifikovat se jako necisgender (13 % respondentů, 9 % mužů) – identifikovat se jako neheterosexuální (30 % žen, 17 % mužů)
- vystudovat společenské vědy (37 % vs. 16 %) nebo zdravotní vědy (13 % vs. 5 %); a méně pravděpodobné, že budete v přírodních vědách (22 % vs. 45 %) nebo v podnikání (16 % vs. 24 %)
- identifikujte se jako člen Demokratické strany (44 % vs. 22 % a je méně pravděpodobné, že se ztotožníte s některou z ostatní strany)
- štíhlý liberál (kde 1 = velmi liberální, 5 = velmi konzervativní; ženy M = 2,51, SD = 1,19; muži M = 3,11)

Nejméně sakralizovaným politickým tématem na těchto kampusech jsou „mosty a silnice“, zatímco tématem nejméně otevřeným k diskusi jsou „transgenderové problémy“:

Na druhou stranu studenti z Madisonu mají o něco větší sklon považovat politicky urážlivá prohlášení za způsobující škodu (47 %) než průměrný student v celém systému UW (37 %):

Summary: The comparisons below seek to better understand if there are some groups of students who feel relatively more or less strongly that people who express offensive views are causing harm to those they offend.

Note. non-cis = non-cisgender; non-hetero = non-heterosexual; sci = sciences; lib = liberal; con = conservative.

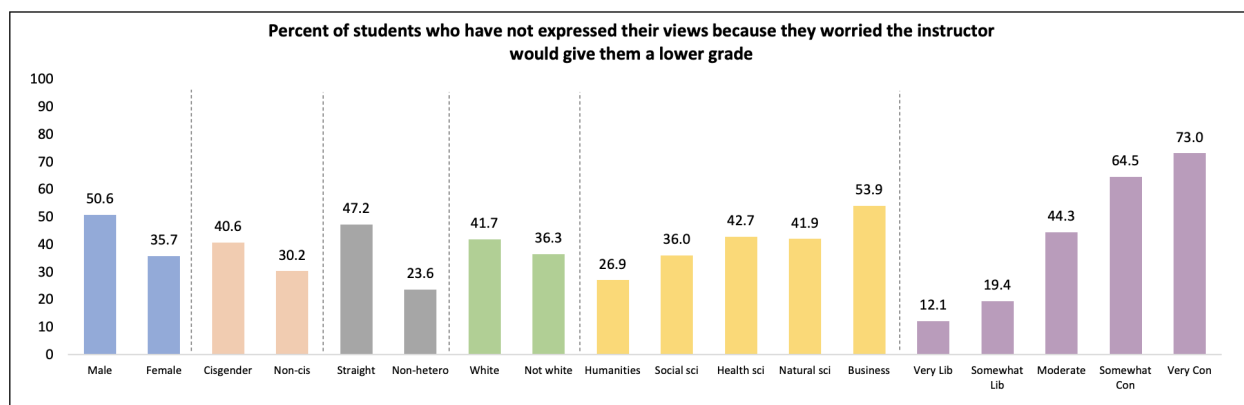

Takže ano, mnoho vysokoškoláků ve Wisconsinu se hlásí ke světovému názoru „Speech Is Violence / Violence Is Speech“, přičemž ženy, humanitní vědci, sexuálně odlišní, menšiny a zvláště velmi liberálové cítí, že řekněme, že zvou Charlese Murrayho na přednášku je násilí, zatímco rozbíjení oken a žhářství ve jménu George Floyd je většinou mírový protest.

Figure 8. Students' perceptions that expressing views they find offensive can be seen as an act of violence toward vulnerable people.

Note. non-cis = non-cisgender; non-hetero = non-heterosexual; sci = sciences; lib = liberal; con = conservative.

Figure 29. Of those who said they have wanted, but decided not, to express their views, the percent who reported it was because they were worried the instructor would give them a lower grade.

Note. non-cis = non-cisgender; non-hetero = non-heterosexual; sci = sciences; lib = liberal; con = conservative.

Obecně si myslím, že vysokoškolská orientace by měla obsahovat varování pouze pro ženy, že věda zjistila, že pocity se 18letým mladým ženám zdají extrémně důležité, ale univerzitním kampusům nelze diktovat komedianty se zraněnými city. Je tedy na vás, studentech, abyste vyvinuli určitou zralost a uvědomili si, že ostatní lidé budou říkat věci, které zraňují vaše city. Máte plné právo říkat jim na oplátku věci, které mohou zranit jejich city – říkáme tomu „debata“ a podporujeme ji – ale úřady kampusu tu nejsou od toho, aby za vás trestaly vaše soupeře, kteří zraňují vaše city slovy. Wisconsin-Madison je jednou z předních státních vlajkových lodí veřejných univerzit, není tak slavná jako Berkeley nebo dokonce Ann Arbor, ale předběhla, řekněme, Missouri nebo Connecticut. Není překvapením, že Madisonův studentský sbor je elitnější a liberálnější než ostatní kampusy.

Note. With the exception of UW-Platteville, there are more liberal respondents than conservative respondents. The greater prevalence of liberal-leaning relative to conservative-leaning students is consistent with national data on political affiliation among millennials and adults with some college education (Pew Research Center, 2015: <https://www.pewresearch.org/politics/2015/04/07/200674>).

To nám umožňuje testovat stereotypy elitních vysokých škol vs. neelitních vysokých škol.

Je překvapivé, že ze 13 vysokých škol UW má Madison druhé nejnižší procento studentů, kteří se identifikují jako „necisgender“ a nejméně žádných odpovědí. (Všimněte si, že Madisonův vzorek o velikosti asi 1100 je docela robustní: to je dost velké pro prezidentské volby.) To je v rozporu se stereotypem, že transmánie infikuje pouze privilegované děti z vyšší střední třídy, jako jsou studenti UW-Madison. Místo toho bylo nejvyšší procento studentů, kteří tvrdili, že nejsou cisgender, na městské UW-Milwaukee a vzdálené UW-Superior poblíž Duluth.

Note. Non-cisgender includes agender, gender fluid, genderqueer, non-binary transgender, non-binary non transgender, trans man, trans woman, two spirit. A large number of respondents did not answer this question (1,484), so (in subsequent tables) comparisons of cisgender and non-cisgender responses should be interpreted with caution.

Madison má stejný počet studentů, kteří se identifikují jako neheterosexuálové, 25,0 %, jako průměr celého systému, 24,9 %.

Table 8. Sexual orientation of the survey respondents, by campus and system wide.

Note. “Not-heterosexual” includes aromantic, asexual, bisexual, gay, lesbian, pansexual, queer.

Takže cokoli, co se děje v hlavách vysokoškolských studentů, aby jim zabránili přiznat své přirozené nutkání k opačnému pohlaví, se zdá být na obou vysokých školách druhé úrovně ve Wisconsinu-Madison zhruba stejně škodlivé jako na nedalekých vysokých školách třetí úrovně. .

Nyní mezi studenty veřejných vysokých škol No Name Directional State ve stavu nadjezdu vidíme, že 10 % se identifikuje jako „ne-cisgender“ a 25 % jako „neheterosexuální“.

Sociální nákaza způsobila, že viry genderové mysli dosáhly pandemického stavu mezi běžnou mládeží ze střední třídy.

Note. Students provided their primary area of academic study via open ended response. If a respondent listed more than one (e.g., “biology, with a music minor”), we coded only the first area listed. “Humanities” includes animation, art, cultural anthropology, design, English, graphic design, history, languages, music, philosophy, theatre arts, women’s studies, writing, etc. “Social Sciences” includes communications, criminal justice, economics, education (of any area or level), family studies, forensic investigation, journalism, political science, psychology, public relations, social sciences, social work, sociology, etc. “Health Sciences” includes biomedical science, dietetics, exercise/sport science, global health, health science, kinesiology, medical technology, nursing, pre-med/pre-nursing/pre-PT/pre-PA/pre-dental/pre-pharmacy, public health, radiation therapy, rehabilitation science, etc. “Natural Sciences” include actuarial sciences, agriculture, animal science, anthropology (unspecified), archaeology, architecture, biology, chemistry, computer science, data science, engineering (biomedical/civil/chemical/computer, etc.), environmental science, genetics, materials science, mathematics, natural resources, neuroscience, physics, soil science, wildlife ecology, etc. “Business” includes accounting, business (general/administration/analytcs), finance, health care administration, human resource management, information systems, international business, management (of any form), marketing, organizational leadership, real estate, sales, etc. Participants who gave a response that was uncategorizable, such as “arts and sciences” or “basket weaving,” were included in the “no response” category.

Můj dojem z pohledu na čísla je, že pevnější přílnavost madisonských studentů k genderové přičetnosti souvisí s tím, že Madison má mnohem více přírodních věd než jiné kampusy.

In addition to showing relative intrinsic motivation to snitch, each of these charts shows students' views of the realistic likelihood of getting some value from complaining about an instructor — that is, alignment with the values of the university administration.

Empirically, the UW administration appears to be pro-female, pro-gay, anti-conservative, anti-business and anti-white.

Obviously, dog-bites-man. But what I tend to like about these college student surveys is that they often show college students aren't idiots about things that affect them.

It was likely “little sisters” that got Volodymyr Zhukovskyy acquitted (to save him from being deported to Ukraine and, JarHead bikers look like Trump supporters) but he may yet get his chance to stand-for-Ukraine:

<https://www.bostonherald.com/2023/02/09/ukrainian-driver-acquitted-in-crash-ordered-to-be-deported-2/>

From the article:

“Prosecutors argued that Zhukovskyy — who had taken heroin, fentanyl and cocaine earlier on the day of the crash — repeatedly swerved back and forth before the collision and told police he caused it. But a judge dismissed eight charges related to whether he was impaired...”

Don't worry Steve (and other CivNats), the Constitution will protect you.

I'm kidding, of course. The Constitution was written by Anglo-American men for Anglo-American men. It fit their biology. Change the biology of the country and those in charge, and you will change the culture and laws.

Not sure why that's so hard for CivNats to accept.

Liberals have their magic dirt, while CivNats have their magic words.

Anyone who has worked in a corporate environment knows this is true. The women are the worst. It's like grade school for adults where they tattletale. When you think about it, guys would seldom go around reporting things to a manager or HR.

But women get a sense of power out of it.

I am not familiar with UW-Madison, but, from what little I know of its student body, it always struck me as more Jewish than other state schools in the Midwest (except maybe Ann Arbor, which is top-tier, so likely has Ivy-like Jewish presence).

Ha, my impression was right. I thought I'd look it up before I hit "publish": <https://www.hillel.org/top-60-jewish-colleges/>

@Recently Based

But what I tend to like about these college student surveys is that they often show college students aren't idiots about things that affect them.

If that's true, which is likely, they also show that most women college students don't have any integrity. Integrity and adherence to principles have never been female traits though.

It's interesting, the questionnaire doesn't even address the notion of MISHEARD statements from the professor, or uncharitable characterization of what is said by the Professor.

Like the way the Administration and some of the students at Yale Law School tried to cancel Amy Chua.

When I was in law school (22 years ago), the student paper tried to cancel a professor because he used the word 'nigarly'. It didn't work then, but I bet it would work now.

(Sometimes only a small part of the post appears until a while later. There's lots of great data there, Steve.)

My impression from glancing at the numbers is that Madison students firmer grip on sanity is related to Madison having far more natural science majors than other campuses.

I'd bet money on that. A yellow bar for Engineering would have been helpful. (Madison is a top Engineering school – maybe they were all too busy to respond to these polls?) Thing is, no matter how much you disagree with the Prof, even if he IS a lefty, if you get the problem right, you get the problem right. There's almost ZERO subjectivity.

It's pretty sickening to realize that only 42% of these people are very likely to allow you to disagree with them about roads and bridges! I mean, unless this is in a CE structures class, and the other guy's wrong because he can't do bending moment diagrams, what's the problem?

The purple bars on the right tell it all, don't they? I'm surprised they published that. It blares out "The left is Totalitarian, and the right is old-school Liberal."

Finally, Go Plattville!!

Okay Steve, now say the same lecture to female employees of Corporations and Government Agencies:

“ In general, I think employee orientations should include female-only warnings that science has discovered that Feelings seem extremely important to 30 year old women, but corporate offices cannot be dictated to by females with hurt feelings. So it is up to you female workers to develop some maturity and realize other people are going to say things that hurt your feelings. You are perfectly entitled to say things in return to them that may hurt their feelings — we call that “debate” and we encourage it — but the corporations and agencies are not here to punish for you your rivals who hurt your feelings with words. Now actually get some work done for a change instead of a new DEI or Cultural Pot Luck lunch meeting initiative.”

Little shocks me now, and I’ve seen the polls showing 20-25 percent of young people identify as LGBT etc., but the “transgender” number is usually about 2 percent. In purple Wisconsin it’s now 10 percent! It’s complete brainwashing and we need to start doing the hard work of taking back K-12 schools and universities, at least in red states.

As a UW – Madison alum, I find these results interesting if unsurprising, and, of course, a little depressing.

Thing is, polls like this will always skew liberal. The premise of each question is always, “How worried are you about education, climate change, gender inequality, racial ‘equity’” etc. I’m not saying it’s a Bad Thing, per se, to ask questions like this. It’s just that, as a conservative, my biggest issue is “None of the Above” and can be fairly summed up as “What are the God damned crazy, nation-wrecking liberals up to now?”

This crude cis-normative mansplaining exemplifies exactly what young women need to be protected against in college. Such words really are violence because they erase female feelings and silence their voices by subjecting women, and especially marginalized transwomen of color, to the patriarchal and white supremacist concept of “debate.” Debate has traditionally been a tool of oppression and verbal violence that is based on socially-constructed hierarchies of “logical coherence” and “empirical evidence.” Hostile silencing through “debate,” is merely a coded dog whistle strategy to denigrate the felt truths of marginalized peoples as somehow being inferior simply because they they do not accord with the hierarchal criteria of “logic” and “evidence” exalted by patriarchal, cis-normative whiteness.

College must provide a safe space for young women to absorb the academic works of scholars and activists who have developed modern theories explaining the racial and gender power relationships that underlie our society, and how these can be remedied. Giving a platform to hostile “opposing viewpoints” and demands for “debate” is obviously contrary to this mission.

This was the strategy employed by the Stasi in East Germany: employ the average person to snitch on their closest relatives and friends for wrongthink. Wives snitched on husbands, children on parents, neighbors on neighbors, and best friends on each other.

It made the Stasi's job much easier — they didn't need to train a huge force to watch everyone, they only need a hardcore group of specialized spies for the serious cases. The rest of their job consisted of frightening individual normies into snitching, sifting through the complaints, and then shows of force to remind the citizens they were peons.

The strategy also had the bonus effect of sewing deep distrust of East Germans against one another, even in nuclear families. As a result, the paranoia caused many potential rebels to go it alone or give up all together, making security much easier.

And the strategy also furthered the communist agenda (continued to this day) of breaking down the nuclear family.

When they opened up the Stasi files, they discovered that nearly 3% of East German citizens were informants for the Stasi. That means out of every 33 people, on average 1 was spying on you and telling Big Brother. Most social circles of family and friends reaches at least 33 people, if not more (parents, siblings, aunts, uncles, grandparents, neighbors, friends, and work colleagues). That means on average everyone in East Germany had someone snitching on them for wrongthink.

<https://intellectualtakeout.org/2019/11/ten-terrifying-facts-about-east-germanys-stasi-surveillance/>

<https://www.spiegel.de/international/germany/east-german-domestic-surveillance-went-far-beyond-the-stasi-a-1042883.html>

So this Little Sisterism today is really just a continuation of a very old and successful communist program.

Agree. Women involuntarily elect a daddy-figure, and normally become loyal to whoever or whatever that is, and reflexively hostile to anyone else. In a healthy society this tendency is controlled by marriage and becomes devotion to family. The state and the megacorp have been perversely allowed to reroute this tendency toward themselves. This is a foundational urge and it can't be rewritten, negotiated with, or asked to control itself.

Some thoughts.....

-Women like gossiping. Women also are wildly emotional, high strung, and easily upset. So it's actually not surprising that they're more likely to "tell" on someone who says "mean."

-The current generations of young people (Millennials and more especially Zoomers) give off an asexual vibe. They're the opposite of the exuberantly free-loving Boomers and nihilistically debauched Gen Xers. Young women seem to really be averse towards men and want them to keep their distance. It's not surprising that their top 3 "touchy" issues are related to protecting their "sexual space" – Transgender issues, Sexual assault, and Abortion. Women want to be able to declare themselves LGBT (to exit the dating market), stop boys from getting sexually aggressive with them, and have an abortion if an "accident" happens (to avoid getting tied down to a particular guy).

-A lot of young people grew up with protective "helicopter parents." These parents usually didn't let their kids play with the neighbor kids. When the kids socialized with friends, usually these were supervised "play dates." When the kids went to birthday parties, usually every kid's parents came along. They typically didn't go to sleepovers. When the kids were at school, there was usually some teacher supervising everyone. The current generation have no experience with unstructured, unsupervised social interaction with individuals of the same age. So when they go to university, they're not accustomed to being around large numbers of kids of their age, without any supervision. That's why so many of them like restrictions (such as speech restrictions and restrictions against sexual harassment/assault) being imposed on them. They're accustomed to protective environments and like the idea of a “safe speech,” in which they’re protected from various types of harm.

-Young people grew up doing most of their socialization not in physical space, but in online space. Online, it’s very easy to “cancel” someone by “blocking” them. People frequently “block” each other for all types of reasons, most of which are quite superficial & inane. So it’s not that surprising that they would want the power to “block” a professor who upset them.

university campuses cannot be dictated to by coeds with hurt feelings. So it is up to you students to develop some maturity and realize other people are going to say things that hurt your feelings. You are perfectly entitled to say things in return to them that may hurt their feelings — we call that “debate” and we encourage it — but the campus authorities are not here to punish for you your rivals who hurt your feelings with words.

Wrong. “Helicopter parenting” teaches kids that there’s always going to be a parent or teacher to protect them from bullies. When the parents and teachers aren’t around, these kids want strict rules in place to offer protection. Speech restrictions are one aspect of this.

Boomers and Gen Xers grew up socializing with neighbor kids, so they’re different and more resilient.

Now, among students at No Name Directional State public colleges in a flyover state, we are seeing 10% identify as “not-cisgender” and 25% as “not-heterosexual.”

Social contagion has caused the gender mind viruses to reach pandemic status among run-of-the-mill middle class youth.

Nah. Lots of young people (especially females) just want a way to avoid being apart of the sexual market for a few more years. Calling yourself “pan-sexual” is a way to avoid having to date anyone, while still looking “cool.” Not having sex because you’re an abstinent Christian = “uncool.” Not having sex because you’re “pansexual” and too complex to find a suitable partner that meets your needs = “cool.”

As I said above, many young people are asexual these days.

Why are they asexual? I think social media, smartphones, and other devices & apps have impaired their ability to become close to other human beings. Young people are accustomed to having an isolated “space,” in which they operate apart from others and structure their social interactions through a screen.

These are not the sort of people who grow up and then embrace their sexuality. Young women especially view sex NOT as a source of pleasure, but as a “violation” of their “space.” Pretending to be LGBT gives them an easy way to avoid having unwanted sex.

Go see the movie “Fast Times at Ridgemont High.” The current generation are exactly the OPPOSITE of that.

Can one combine the female-male divide on these questions with the Orwellian formulation specifically about speech into one theory? For example, intra-female conformity and conflict is carried out via speech (gossip, etc), while women still often expect to sit on the sidelines with regard to activities that are physically difficult or dangerous (high-rise construction, etc), and the effect of these two phenomena is to increase the salience of speech and decrease the salience of actual physical violence for women such that women are more likely to believe in “speech=violence/violence=speech”?

@Rowing Soon

I think it all starts with the inevitable process of self-interested parties stretching the meaning of potent words. For example, once “racism” was deemed universally abhorrent, it got redefined from burning a cross and refusing to hire blacks, to not liking Beyonce enough or referring to a black guy as “articulate.” They get decades of mileage out of watering a word down until it’s finally so weak that people roll their eyes about “what’s ‘racist’ now.” Then they have to switch to something stronger-sounding like “white supremacist,” and start the process all over again.

Same thing for “violence” and “safety.” Once everyone agreed that physical intimidation and harm were clearly wrong, the slow word-stretching for these terms was on. I can actually remember when Jesse Jackson would say in the 90’s that not funding such-and-such a program for the ghetto was “economic violence,” and I remember thinking “that’s pretty dumb and won’t catch on.” But it just took awhile.

But while Jesse wanted a shakedown for money, women seem to want some kind of emotional privilege from disagreement. That probably comes from their experience with the “mean girl” intra-female power structure: i.e., forming cliques that viciously enforce conformity by slander, harassment, humiliation, and ostracism. The “safe space” that women crave basically seems to be a guaranteed membership in a prestigious social clique that won’t turn on them so long as they follow the rules. Anything that would put them in peril of nonconformity, such as stirring up controversy within the clique and making them take sides, probably does seem scary to young women raised in the age of extreme social media anxiety.

Btw, the big casualty of all of this stupidity is teenage girls. Lacking a strong culture (and by culture, I mean a strong people since culture is downstream from biology – sorry CivNats), they cling to anything and, right now, that's gender identity nonsense.

Exactly. Colorblind CivNats cling to the bizarre belief that the magic words of the Constitution will protect whites.

The recent back and forth between Michael Anton and the Z-man show this. Anton believes that the principles put forth by the Founding Fathers are based of God-given or nature-given rights that are correct for all peoples.

Anton is a fool. (Granted, a smart, good-hearted fool, much like a certain writer that we all know, but a fool all the same.) The ideals of the Founding Fathers aren't from God. They were derived from a specific people for a specific people. Change the people and you change the ideals.

Steve, Anton and all the colorblind CivNats believe in magic words, even as they mock the Left's believe in magic dirt. It's hilariously ironic, not that the CivNats get the joke.

Steve always believes that he's just one graph away from getting the non-whites to "see the light" of the wisdom of those Anglo-American ideals. What hubris!

Hey, Steve, maybe those non-whites have a different way of viewing the world. Have you ever thought of that? Maybe they don't care too much about Freedom of Speech or Freedom of Religion or all the other Anglo-American ideals because they're no Anglo-American or, at the very least, West European.

Nah, better to write about traffic statistics and ask blacks to please, please, please act more like whites. Steve, always the missionary.

Go see the movie “Fast Times at Ridgemont High.” The current generation are exactly the OPPOSITE of that.

Once upon a time this qualified as common knowledge, but FTRH was written by Cameron Crowe based on his own novel of the same name, in which he went undercover as a student at Clairemont High School in San Diego. Director Amy Heckerling was only 28.

These factors gave the film a high degree of verisimilitude.

Madison has the same number of students identifying as Not Heterosexual, 25.0%, as the entire system average, 24.9%

25% “not heterosexual,” LOL.

College these days sure as hell ain’t what it was back in 1983...

@Citizen of a Silly Country

You've seen this 14yo New Jersey girl who committed suicide after viral video bullying? I expected diversity, but the key video has a white girl, slightly taller than the victim, who suckerpunches her and knocks her out, in bathroom apparently free from diversity. They look like nice suburban college bound kids with good parents and multiple cars at home. Where does something like that come from? In the past girl bullying would mean verbal taunting, it sure as hell wouldn't mean knocking your victim out with one strike.

Madison is a trendy small city with a lot of amenities so appealing to east/west coast Jews, but they don't spearhead the far left tendencies there, and the JAP girls are very stylish and buxom— you can see what here during the 70's,

@Hypnotoad666

“Hostile silencing through “debate,” is merely a coded dog whistle strategy to denigrate the felt truths of marginalized peoples as somehow being inferior simply because they do not accord with the hierarchal criteria of “logic” and “evidence” exalted by patriarchal, cis-normative whiteness.”

The University itself is meant to enlighten through training in the use of logic and the gathering of evidence. A simple solution for those who find logic and debate anathema is to seek some other kind of training. What is at issue: the desire for status through academic credentials. Those who resent the demands of intellectual development but won't find some other route to achieve their ambitions are destroying the education system. Iconoclasm is a great thing in its proper place but professors who exhibit such nihilism are the lowest form of life.

You got me (but I notice that certainly the Armstrong brothers were gentiles?). Interesting that before and after the bombing, they were solidly situated with left-wing scum, including the SLA, and in the 80s were allowed to sell food (!) on campus. Imagine if our society defended itself.

My impression of Jews in the Midwest is that they are generally very Establishmentarian, rather than wild-eyed radicals. Of course, these days, what used to be wild-eyed radical views ARE very Establishment.

My guess is that it's also disproportionately white females.

Speaking of Jews, whatever happened to Althea Bernstein who was attacked by Proud Boys in Madison, Wisconsin?

“One word: plastics.”

Okay, that was said in Pasadena, not Columbus. But '60s LA was pretty Midwestern.

Nah. Lots of young people (especially females) just want a way to avoid being apart of the sexual market for a few more years. Calling yourself “pan-sexual” is a way to avoid having to date anyone, while still looking “cool.” Not having sex because you’re an abstinent Christian = “uncool.” Not having sex because you’re “pansexual” and too complex to find a suitable partner that meets your needs = “cool.”

This is very insightful; thanks.

Police report has him “previously involved in multiple incidents involving ‘aggressive and violent behavior.’”

Also assaulted five at the hospital.

Resume indicated he has a law degree; school says he’s on a leave of absence.

Nice.

Her parents finally figured out her story was a load of hooey and then they quieted everything down. I think they did a good job once they figured out what was going on and protected their child from doubling down.

I swear that my impression of women was indelibly affected by a trivial experience I had in 8th grade in 1970 in CA. Up to that time, the school auditorium had always been called the “multi-use room.” Apparently they had a meeting and decided to change the term to “multi-purpose room.” So one day I used the superseded term, and this young teacher, or perhaps trainee, corrected me. About an hour later, I did it again, and she corrected me again. Ever since, I’ve thought, no way a man would ever have concerned himself with it.
